The Battle of Washington Square: 1958

Washington Square is closed to traffic. Not permanently, nor are the buses out of the park, but the fact that a temporary closing has been arranged by the city is a substantial victory for the "anti-traffic" forces. This has been the major story in Greenwich Village in 1958.

The prize—final and permanent closing—is within reach. If it has not come as a Christmas present to the Village, a suggestion of Raymond S. Rubinow, chairman of the Joint Emergency Committee to Close Washington Square Park to Traffic, it cannot long be withheld.

Closing a Success

The trial-closing has worked out so well that not a single public official has taken exception to the "anti-traffic" group's flat claim that the experiment has been a success. Even Traffic Commissioner T. T. Wiley, an advocate of a four-lane roadway through the Square, has admitted that the closing has caused no congestion. The commissioner had originally stated that a 30-day experimental closing would be sufficient to assess the situation. Sixty days have passed, and he now says the temporary ban on cars will be extended indefinitely. It is highly unlikely that he would be reluctant to make public the results of the study if they conformed with his point of view, that is, the necessity to keep the park open to traffic.

DeSapio in Picture

The present phase of the Washington Square story began just a year ago, in mid-December, 1957.

On December 19, Carmine DeSapio came to a meeting, called by the Greenwich Village Study, at NYU's Vanderbilt Hall. His presence there was well-heralded. Earlier in the day he had released a telegram indicating, unequivocally, his support for closing the Square to traffic.

Mr. DeSapio's coming to the meeting was something of a coup. Normally, he avoided direct involvement in Village matters, except to receive the honors—plaques, citations, dinners—annually given to him. However, the Village situation was changing, and his presence at Vanderbilt

WASHINGTON SQUARE. The Battleground: 1952—?

Hall attested to it. Just three months before, Herman S. Greitzer, a virtually unknown candidate, running for Democratic District Leader with the backing of the insurgent Village Independent Democrats, polled an amazing 37 per cent of the primary vote against the Tammany Chief.

Mr. DeSapio made his speech before a clearly partisan "anti-traffic" audience but he never repeated the unambiguous "anti-traffic" words of his telegram. The New York Times was caught up in the confusion. Its early edition said that he "gave his support" to the opponents of a roadway; in the later edition the word "qualified" was inserted as a modifier. The Times suggested that he had "softened" the stand he took earlier in the day.

Cross Purposes

He further announced at the meeting that no conflict existed between himself and Borough President Hulan E. Jack on the question of the Square. This surprising remark did not line up very well with Mr. Jack's often-repeated assertion that he would consider any solution to Washington Square except closing it to traffic.

Thus, Mr. DeSapio departed the scene leaving the "anti-traffic" forces with nothing to hold on to except an ambiguous statement.

The group began to fear that their new-found ally had developed second thoughts on the subject.

The Tammany Chief's emergence into the picture was quickly followed—on Christmas Eve—by a blast from Park Commissioner Robert Moses. With refreshing candor, Mr. Moses wheeled the crux of the matter onto the center of the stage. He stated, without apologies: "The developers of the Washington Square South apartments were formally, officially, and reliably promised under the Slum Clearance Act a Fifth Avenue address and access for the large new population in multiple dwellings replacing warehouses."

The commissioner did not specify who made the promise but he did assert flatly that Mr. Jack "repeatedly stated to the Slum Clearance Committee and others that he would approve the four-lane depressed Fifth Avenue through Washington Square roadway . . . In fact, his office originally prepared this plan and we agreed to it."

No Denial

Mr. Jack never denied the Moses statement, although he had regularly insisted that he had never made any commitment to anyone on the Square.

As 1957 became 1958 a hush fell over the scene, which lasted until the end of February when Mr. Moses sent word to the Board of Estimate that he wanted the "promised" roadway through the Square—48 feet wide.

Earlier in the week, J. G. L. Molloy, president of the Greenwich Village Association, asked Mayor Wagner to receive a delegation of Village's who were in favor of closing the park to traffic. The Mayor subsequently met with the group, listened attentively, but was noncommittal.

Going Gets Rough

By the end of the month the situation began to look desperate for those who wanted to close the Square to traffic.

The Hulan Jack Plan, calling for a 36-foot, three-lane roadway, was at last ready to be acted upon.

It was at that point that the Joint Emergency Committee to Close Washington Square Park to Traffic (JEC) was formed. Raymond S. Rubinow, a foundation consultant and dynamic figure, became its chairman. The founding JEC members included Mrs. Shirley Hayes, whose Washington Square Park Committee had carried on the fight practically single-handed since 1952. Its membership was heavier on experts, than on the better-known community leaders; most of the latter were not prepared to commit themselves to the untried group or disagreed with its aim.

The JEC did, however, act as a significant rallying point for popular support and brought into the picture important figures in the city.

No sooner was the JEC formed than a bold attempt was made to torpedo it. In a release on March 17 to this newspaper, which was the community organ that supported the JEC stand, Mr. Jack claimed that 22 Village organizations were opposed to closing the Square and backed his plan for a 36-foot roadway. The move, if it had been successful, would have enabled the Borough President to point to a disastrously-wide division of opinion in the Village.

Withers Away

Mr. Jack learned very quickly—within 72 hours—he had been sold a hoax. In the light of day the organizational backing for his stand withered away to a handful

It was in this same release that he called the "anti-traffic," JEC group a "loud-mouthed minority." He further suggested that their agitation derived from "strange motives and sources we have not yet been able to determine." "Strange, indeed!" quipped one irreverent JEC member, at the time. "We're not even looking for a real estate deal."

Memory Lapse

Mr. Rubinow reacted by not only challenging the facts in Mr. Jack's statement, but by reminding the Borough President that he [Rubinow] had been a member of Mr. Jack's 1957 re-election committee.

On the day following the Jack blast, the Washington Square Park Committee met to inaugurate a new petition drive in collaboration with the JEC. The anti-DeSapio Village Independent Democrats joined the drive in a body, while Mr. DeSapio's own local Tammany club, the Tamawa, was listed as favoring Mr. Jack's roadway plan. The latter fact added to the confusion over Mr. DeSapio's position.

The JEC proceeded to enlist the support of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt. The former First Lady agreed to appear before the City Planning Commission on May 14, the day scheduled for a hearing on

The Poetry Contest: Winners

The second annual Poetry Contest sponsored by this column attracted several hundred entries from many different parts of the country. When the judging was finished, however—handled meticulously by Jean Garrigue and Ruth Herschberger, excellent poets themselves—the first two winning entries turned out to have been submitted by Villagers.

The winners:

1. George Gordon, Morton Street
2. Albert Waller, West 11th Street
3. Jim Hallahan, University Avenue, the Bronx

Honorable mentions: Marybeth Little Weston of Scarsdale (a winner last year) and Susan Gorbea of West 88th Street.

Other poems the judges liked were by C. Stoloff, Carson Davison, Carman Moore, R. S. Brown, Michael Wiener, and Hu Carroll Ferreira.

My thanks are especially due to the following organizations which have donated books as prizes: The Eighth Street Book Shop, Simon & Schuster, the MacMillan Company, New Directions, Knopf, Dial Press, and Doubleday. Kenneth Patchen also donated a copy of his book "Poemscape".

WHEN I THUS TREMBLE HANDED DROP THE FLASK

(First Prize)
When I thus tremble handed drop the flask
And breathe scotch fumes upon my slumbering Phoebe
Who, pink flannelled and sweet smiling waits
The Spring to come to my tormented loins,
I think of father, groaning out of bed
In Winter, with the snow swirls
And the wind gusts heating at the house;
I see him in that dank and rumpled nightshirt,
Faint smelling of an ancient mustard poultice,
Down the stairway, raging, raging at my mother
Who did not change the too full chamber pot.

Dark ashed, the one time embers on the hearth
Stirred madly at the storm come through the door
That wildly clatter banged
As father's curses at the ill struck night,
Sucked up into the fury of the wind,
Died harshly in the darkness.
O, I could feel as he
The icy melancholy of the backyard privy.

That vengeful spectre, vapor breathing,
Blue lipped, blue legged in the blackness,
The frostbite searing at those gaunt and trembling haunches,
Waited grimly for the Summer
(As my Phoebe waits for Spring)
Waited grimly for my mother
Who, fear tremored in the great bed,
Flew from father's Celtic wrath.
And, with trachea ever parched,
Drank warm Guinness at The Black Horse
Where damp sawdust did for heather,
Dented cuspidors for trees;
Where, with pinches on her hammocks
And rogue slaps upon her thighs
By Macdonnell and O'Leary,
Her shrill cackles filled The Black Horse
As they never filled the kitchen.

Then came reeling back to father
Who, fast frozen to the cold boards,
Sat dark brooding in the shed
Like Gro-Magnon man at Stonehenge,
Till hot water from the sooted cauldron
Disengaged him.

Thus, groaning from my unrequited bed,
White knuckled on the rag rug spinning stairs
(Not fearing wolf howls on the frozen lake
Nor pneumococcus on the polar air)
Toward raucous windows at The Black Horse Inn,
High wheezing laughter at the ale warped bar,
Not looking back, I clatter bang the door;
I cannot brook my Phoebe's anguished snore.

Mrs. Pulsifer:

The Genteel Generation, and
The World Around the Square

"At the table one should talk about roses." This statement from Susan Nichols Pulsifer's book, "A House in Time," reflects the chasm that divided Washington Square from Greenwich Village during the closing years of the 19th century. Mrs. Pulsifer's mother expressed the sentiment at a time when the world of Washington Square could be described as genteel, elegant, and above all, insulated.

Mrs. Pulsifer, a quiet-spoken, serene woman, still lives in the house at 42 West 11th Street that she has written about with such feeling. Her book, just published by Citadel Press, has been illustrated very pertinently by another long-time Villager, Edward C. Caswell.

Cornerstone of Literature

The author was brought up in a happy, modulated environment that lent a cherished, balanced quality even to melancholy. Reflecting in her book on two childhood friends, she writes "... Yet even today I feel pride in having these particular boys as my youthful playmates, for Teddy met a heroic death as a young officer on the battlefield of World War I, and Ernest has achieved fame in the ateliers of Paris."

In a comfortable room, full of personal history, Mrs. Pulsifer spoke of her "inordinate admiration for the French," and especially for those two brilliant letter-writers, Madame de Stael and Madame de Sevigne. "The cornerstone of literature is the letter-form," she said.

No Jamesian

"I am more interested in the writer who reveals—not the facts of life—but the feeling." Even though agreeing that style is "perhaps even more important than content," she does not care for her fellow-Washington Squareite, Henry James. "I very much want—although maybe I haven't—a positive and constructive point of view."

Nor does she like T. S. Eliot, whom she knew. He depressed her. As for "The Wasteland," "I have never personally known life to be like that."

Beat Generation

Yet, she feels she can look toward the "beat generation" with the "acceptance of a grandmother."

"I believe I have been through the feelings of the 'beat generation' with my youngest son, David. He is under 25, and is much happier being a lobsterman in Maine than when he was making the rounds of cocktail parties in Greenwich Village." "In fact," she remarked, "I took him a book, recently, called 'The Beat Generation and The Angry Young Men', and he was shocked."

Mrs. Pulsifer is deeply involved

'Noh' Lyric-Drama
In Village

The first complete performance of David Levy's "Sotoba Komachi" will be presented by Greenwich House Opera Workshop at 27 Barrow Street on January 9 and 10 at 8.30 p. m.

"Sotoba Komachi," a one-scene lyric drama featuring two dancers, four singers, and chamber ensemble, is based on a Japanese Noh play. Robert Blafied is the director and the cast includes Daniel Caruso, James Aragon, Jane Harkness, Ruth Ray, and Jovinghan Lee.

Wolf-Ferrari's "Secrets of Suzanne" will also be included in the evening's program, with Mary Gavin, Ramon Gilbert, and Anthony Cutler as the singers.

with the "neighborhood." Her participation in it dates back to the memory of her parents who always went to meetings of the Washington Square Association and the very social Neighborhood Club. As she describes it in her book, the dates of the meetings were "firmly encircled on the home calendar of events ... I understood little of the meaning and significance of these gatherings—only that they were important, and that one must go, sort of in deference to The Neighborhood and to oneself, as an inhabitant of The Neighborhood."

Mrs. Pulsifer has remained true to her concern for the neighborhood (even after it ceased to be capitalized). She was one of the original band—with Shirley Hayes—who fought unrelentingly to close Washington Square to traffic.

At the moment, though she divides her time between a "salt-water" farm in Maine and the house on 11th Street, she is rooted to Greenwich Village. "A house is not something you can give up, any more than you can give up your family," she said. "There is a big move among women of my age to leave their homes and go into small apartments, I'd be like a plant without roots—I'd wilt and die."

THE RESTORATION OF MEANING TO CONTEMPORARY LIFE

By Paul Elmen. Doubleday, $3.95.

by Howard R. Moody

The "sickness unto death" of Kierkegaard and the "nausea" of Sartre seem like nothing worse than acid indigestion compared with the painful and fatal illness of boredom and meaninglessness described by the author of this new treatise on the American malaise of ennui which threatens to choke our life off. It is very refreshing, though not consoling, in the midst of all the written and spoken words about atomic destruction and nuclear holocaust, to find a prophet who is suggesting that in all likelihood we won't be blown up; we will just be smothered by the tedium of human existence. One is reminded by George Bernard Shaw's words that "historians, moralists, even philosophers refuse to see anything but the criminal; they recreate evil in the image and likeness of humanity. They form no idea of essential evil, that vast yearning for the void for emptiness: since if ever our species is to perish it will die of boredom, of stale disgust."

The author reminds us that modern man is prepared for everything—catastrophes of all kinds—earthquakes, nuclear attack, sudden death. But he is not prepared for the most horrible discovery of all: nothingness. The shock of discovering that total oblivion threatens everywhere is unlike the fear of anything we have known since the days of our childhood. In the face of the Void we are helpless and weak; we have forgotten the name of our Meaning, which we could call on to save us. As the meaning goes out of life, we invent new kinds of triviality to fill our boredom. The final end of the eradication of meaning is the flat, tasteless ennui of the carbuncular clerk in "The Wasteland" or the vacuous faces of that army of men and women for whom life holds neither the hope of heaven nor the fear of hell. Meaninglessness sends them whirling through emptier and emptier days.

Never has an author written about boredom in such an intense and fascinating way. Whether or

EVERGREEN 5

Grove Press, $1.

Unfortunately a growing dichotomy is discernible in the "Evergreen Review"—an incongruity between the intellectual level of the non-fiction and the appallingly low level of the fiction and poetry.

Although "The Case of James Dean" is perhaps too short to support the generalizations it raises, it does an exciting job of relating a contemporary phenomenon to an archetypal structure. "No More Masterpieces" and "The Human Universe" surround another aspect of the present situation—the dissipation of our initial responses to both natural and artistic surroundings. The feature piece, however, is strikingly superficial.

With the exception of a short lyric by David Lyttle, the poetry lacks tenseness and power; here content as well as form has been sacrificed on the altar of "spontaneity." The fiction, exclusive of a story by William Eastlake, for the most part lacks any meaning whatsoever. The direction of "beat" prose is increasingly toward unselected chunks of daily existence—what would bore in a bar and is even more desperately tedious on paper.

An aesthetic standard could create a challenge to the stuffiness of most academic quarterlies. Continued lack of taste may allow "Evergreen" to ride the beat-generation kick but to fail at establishing any identity of importance.

—Betty Berenson

not one agrees with his strong theological analysis of modern man's ennui, one cannot help but admire Mr. Elmen's gift for poetic writing and in part the deep poetic consciousness which enables him to deal in such a penetrating way with his subject. The book is one which moves from boredom to horror to glory. His final assertion that the meaning and glory that we thought were dead are alive again, we may not believe; but if we see the nothingness and the horror in its nakedness, we may wish with all our heart we could believe.

letters to the editor

Gorgeous

Dear Sir:

The coins attached to this communicate are cost-coverage for five (5) copies of your issue of December 17, which I ask to be dispatched to me promptly.

As one of your subscribers in good standing, I received this Voice edition in the mail. What with all the New York newspapers being on strike for so long, I'd become so hungry for newspaper fare by the time my Voice of the 17th arrived that, before I had even given it a decent glance, I had eaten it! Therefore, one of the attached dimes is to replace my mailed issue that was devoured so greedily. (By way of clinical, objective comment, you may be interested to know that The Voice does not digest easily. Perhaps you should add a "not to be taken internally" warning on all future issues.)

The other four dimes are not to go into your fund to buy yo-yos for the Mau-Maus, as you might otherwise naturally assume, but to cover the issues I plan to dispatch to various friends living in Ft. Atkinson, Wisc., Scituate, Mass., Brooklyn, Iowa (honest), and Bloomington, Ill. My reason for wanting this particular issue of The Voice stems from the fact that I did manage to glom its Feiffer contribution—the mama who wants her son to be happy—because I always eat the best part of anything last. This guy is no less than the Herblock of the Fringe-Paranoiac Set. The keen sensitivity of Mr. F., and the way he can toss the zingers around unerringly with such joyous, devastating results, is no less than gorgeous. Therefore, I consider it my duty as a patriotic Amurrrrican to try to spread his stuff around a bit. So any delay in your sending me the five copies requested will be interpreted as a vile attempt on your part to chip away at my patriotism.

After you've issued the proper directives connected with my accompanying four bits, you might read and consider reprinting the following fascinating information filler which I came across in the November, 1881 edition of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly (I'm a little behind in my reading):

The Lower Plains

"It seems that the attempt to naturalize camels in Texas and New Mexico was not, after all, an utter failure. The camels used for carrying freight across the California Desert did not, for some reason, prove profitable, and they were turned loose on the Gila and Salt River bottoms. There they lived and bred, until now, it is said, they roam the lower Gila plains in large numbers, giving the Louisiana Citizen ground for the belief that they 'will continue to increase in numbers until a drove of wild camels will become as common on the western plains of Arizona as buffalo now are on the plains east of the Rocky Mountains.'"

Uncanny prophecy, eh?

So send the papers awreddy.

THE NOBLE GRAPES AND THE GREAT WINES OF FRANCE

By Andre L. Simon. McGraw-Hill, $15.

by Barry Lee Cohen

Andre L. Simon, a prolific writer on wines, has again combined his expert knowledge and impressive years of experience to produce "The Noble Grapes and the Great Wines of France."

Printed in the Netherlands and published in this country by McGraw-Hill, the book boasts of 24 full-color photographs by Percy Hennell. "Boasts" because the color work, which was processed in England, is as fine a job as you will find in present-day publishing.

This is no livre ordinaire to be swallowed whole, but an invitation to wine-tasting; no pagan homage to Bacchus, but the assured musings and recommendations of a Chevalier des Tastevin and member of the Saintsbury Club. Bordeaux versus Burgundy; the storing and serving of wines;

Further Thoughts on Varese:

He's Out There on the Moon, Reaching Back

by H. B. Lutz

Edgard Varese's "Poeme Electronique," which ended last month's memorable concert at the Village Gate with much more than a bang, although just as explosive and revolutionary, I do believe, as the Lexington-Concord turbulence of 1775, was not a shot heard around the world—at least not yet; and not yet has the avant-garde work of this modern master of sound had the dramatic impact on music as we know it that the famous Armory Show had on painting as they knew it prior to 1913 (before the offensive "Ashcan School" of monsters roused the fury of all good art critics and experts of that day; before the "shocking horrors" now calmly accepted as abstract painting moved in), but it seems to this grassroots layman that the gap between the Varese approach to sound and music represents a greater jump from old to new than any other single step ever attempted in any of the arts. I happen to adore the "archaic" work of Palestrina and the "modern" of the late Bartok, so when I suggest that Varese makes Bartok, Carl Ruggles, and other "moderns" sound like Palestrina, it is with no disrespect for any of the foregoing composers. Because as I see it, while the pioneer "modern" composers have been reaching farther and farther out, building a bridge, let us say, to the moon, this man Varese is already out there on the moon reaching back.

Relax, Everybody

Those at the Village Gate concert who did not dig his signals—and none of my best friends did—have no need to wear chips on their shoulders. Relax, my friends, Varese is no cold-blooded, sadistic Bluebeard trying to slaughter and dismember you with his electronic sound. Since I wrote my first piece on that concert [Voice, November 19], my wife and I have dined and wined with Mr. and Mrs. Varese, and there are no two more charming, warm, compassionate human beings. But what

EDGARD VARESE AT HIS PIANO

I'm about to say in regard to what I consider M. Varese's greatest contribution is on my own responsibility, not his.

When, at the Gate, just prior to the electronic rendition of his work, Varese spoke of setting sound "free," he was evidently thinking mostly in terms of setting sound free of scales and tempo; to me he also liberated sound from all previous associations; context, and meaning—directly opposite from James Joyce's purpose in inventing word sounds. Familiar sounds, like smells, do have associations; sound vibrations hitting the ear drums from a flute, a bass violin, a trumpet, a snare drums, are all tied up with associations of remembrance, emotional and sensory context that strike too deeply in the unconscious to be dug up and analyzed. Now Varese's greatest originality, I think, lies in the fact that he by-passes all musical instruments and electronic imitations, and instead sounds out electronically-originated sound vibrations of pure sound, free of all association, direct to the ear drum; and so the sensory system of the listener becomes the instrument played upon. He leaves behind those familiar psychic realms illuminated by Freud, Jung, et al, and enters the territory staked out by Pavlov and Watson; his sound waves beat solely on our reflexes, not as random noises but by artful design; the result is unlike any other music ever heard. It's both a shocking and a cleansing experience, as was modern architecture when it first appeared.

No one can predict the sound of things to come as the world moves on into another new age, but everyone knows that music, like all the other arts, cannot stand still. If the music of tomorrow is not going to move in the direction so brilliantly explored and pioneered by Edgard Varese, then where is it going to go? Where else is there for it to go?

movie journal

by Jonas Mekas

In "THE HORSE'S MOUTH" (at the Paris) Alec Guinness is having another one of his field days. This is an actor's film, not cinema. Like most humorous novels since "Don Quixote," the Joyce Cary book on which the film is based was uneven and episodic. And so is the movie. "The Horse's Mouth" is far from being as subtly amusing and original a comedy as, say, "My Uncle." In addition to its weakness of structure, the film is, most of the time, over-acted. Still, it is a very amusing picture. Being an actor of distinction, Guinness again creates a unique and very personal character—a caricature of an artist and a genius that is at once comical, pitiable, and tragic.

While we're talking about comedy, and since there haven't been any movies lately that I could recommend to an average intelligent film-goer (exceptions: "Pather Panchali," "The Seventh Seal," "My Uncle," "He Who Must Die"), there is occasion to point up a few early sound and silent-film revivals. In its retrospective series the Museum of Modern Art this week (through January 3) is showing Robert Benchley's "THE SEX LIFE OF THE POLYP," a small masterpiece that nobody should miss. On the same program there is another short film, a Movietone newsreel, in which G. B. S., during his first trip to the States, makes his comment on America. It is something to hear.

A silent "classic" of a more serious nature is King Vidor's "HALLELUJAH," at the Museum of Modern Art, January 4-10. Seeing it again, one is surprised by its visual strength. Although it is a sound film (1929), Vidor was still a silent-film director, and "Hallelujah" has a visual dynamic rarely seen in today's anemic cinema. And his careful use of sound reminds us that the sound track in 1929 was still considered a creative element of the film, not a Doppleganger. The same could be said about the first version of "THE JAZZ SINGER," currently being revived around town. The first sound film! One wishes that the 100,000th sound movie ever made (we are at least somewhere near that figure!) had such an effective track. Revisited, "The Jazz Singer" strikes me also as a very faithful depiction of Jewish middle-class life. What a long way from its stark, direct, bold images to Wouk's sickly pale "Marjorie Morningstar."

Through the aura of sentimentality that surrounds most of the second-rate silent and early sound movies, there now emerges another life which begins to interest us more and more, i. e., their documentation of the period. It would seem to me that the films made in the 20's, because of their spontaneity and exuberance, were more self-revealing than the too often contrived pretentiousness of those produced in 1958 (exceptions being, perhaps, the Elvi Presley type pictures, some simple thrillers, B and C films—movies which have no artistic pretensions and are curiously dismissed by the critics such as myself as not recommendable.)

PAUL TAYLOR & CO.

At the 92nd Street YMHA, Saturday evening, December 19.

It is three years since Paul Taylor started performing solo and group dances, and one of the most invigorating things about his concerts has been the constant development and change from one year to the next. Not that one always prefers the new work—in this case I didn't—but it is important that an artist keep growing.

In Taylor's earlier concerts I was struck by the joy emanating from dancers and dances. This is gone, and has not been replaced by anything of equal force—no greater complexity of space, rhythm, dynamics, or greater variety of movement, or increase in atmosphere, except in two works from last year's concert: "Epic" and, particularly, "Events 2." The latter is a tremendously poetic interpretation of a "slice of life"—two girls waiting—and has intense atmosphere, created by the economy of movement, the stillness, a recording of rain sounds, and wind blowing skirts and curtains. It is an original theatrical experience.

As a dancer, Mr. Taylor is vigorous, supple, and beautiful to watch. His company of girls, Toby Armour, Phena Darner, Viola Farber, and Donya Feuer, are well-trained and lovely, and all maintain the expression of quiet serenity which seems at present to be the attitude of the dances. I look forward to future concerts and the interesting developments they should present in Paul Taylor's choreographic career.

CHRISTMAS EVE AT JUDSON

At the stroke of midnight on Christmas Eve, Santa Claus, in the disguise of the Reverend Howard R. Moody, arrived at Judson Church. Mr. Moody presented to the large assemblage the Collegium Musicum and its conductor, Fritz Rikko, who performed works by Bach, Vivaldi, Alexandro Scarlatti, Telemann, and Handel.

In his introduction Mr. Moody accurately described the group as an excellent chamber-music organization well-known to music lovers—and this was proved, as he said, by the capacity audience in the church. Although the minister intended merely to welcome both the congregation and the performers, he was unwittingly reviewing the concert before it was heard, for only the most rewardingly critical adjectives can be employed to comment on the soloists (too numerous to name in this brief space) and the whole orchestra. Permit the listener to offer a hearty thank you and a much deserved Happy New Year to Mr. Moody, Mr. Rikko, and their associates who made possible a more pleasant Christmas.

BRIGHT PARTY

by Jerry Tallmer

Like many other people of my generation, I suffer at times from a disease for which there is as yet no name. Let me suggest one: nostalgia manque. It is to be de-defined as an intense if free-floating desire to recapture or revisit that which we never had or experienced in the first place. The most endemic instance would of course be the general emotion today toward the 1920's of those who were only 8 or so, as I was, when the sun was also arising on Jake, Brett, Dick, Nicole, Jay, Daisy, and all the rest of the beautiful and damned; but nos. manq. is an ailment which can also touch us in certain localized areas private unto each, and for me there has always been a deep special regret over never having seen the famous early revues of those living legends, BETTY COMDEN and ADOLPH GREEN. And now at last the wheel has some full circle; they are recreating both their early work and their late in a delightful "Party" at the John Golden, and if to watch it is in my case as in strange and slightly disappointing double focus—for I had expected something more caustic, less cordial—it is still with a sense of long delayed fulfillment and much gratitude. I cannot imagine anyone not being made happier by their brisk satires of movies, opera, showbiz, Variety, the Reader's Digest; by their seemingly inexhaustible verve with patter, action, and songs; and by their unfailing if perhaps too charitable deftness at pinpointing an absurdity without pushing the pin all the way bitterly in. Even one of their sarcastic references to Hitler seemed to me, in 1958, to be so mild and fleeting as to make for its own weird inverse nostalgia, and I was better able to

THE POWER AND THE GLORY

An adaptation by Dennis Cannan and Pierre Bost from the novel by Graham Greene about the hunt-down of a poor "whiskey"-priest in Communist Mexico. Expert direction by Stuart Vaughan of a cast including Fritz Weaver, Eric Berry, Jack Cannon, Leonardo Cimino, Meredith Dallas, Patricia Falkenhain, Robert Geiringer, Betty Miller, Albert Quinton, Jerry Stiller. Only missing element: the pull and beat of Greene's own words and moods.

This Week in FM

by Ed McLean
There is a small group of reasonably dedicated people in New York FM for whom compensation (if any) is secondary. Some of these may be found in production and administrative jobs. Most, however, are "talent"—the men and women who write and do their own programs.

One of these people is Gideon Bachmann, whose "The Film Art" program may be heard every Sunday at 8 p. m. over WBAI-FM. His weekly half-hour is devoted to interviews with film-makers and performers, reviews of films, and investigations of specific areas of the art of films. In recent months Bachmann has interviewed Federico Fellini, Jean Renoir, John Huston, Jacques Tati, Fritz Lang, Viveca Lindfors, and others. This Sunday (January 4) he begins a four-broadcast series on unusual music created for the films. Beginning with a program of music from the "silent" films, Bachmann will also feature an entire broadcast of music composed by Charles Chaplin for his "Limelight," "City Lights," "Modern Times," etc. The two concluding programs will investigate "musique concrete" and "artificial music" (music created by drawing a sound track directly onto virgin film with a pen).

Like others on FM, Gideon Bachmann has a full range of interests in addition to his weekly show. One of these is his periodical on films, Cinemages. Bachmann writes, produces, and distributes this at irregular intervals (six issues in a three-year period). "The purpose of Cinemages"—Bachmann says—"is to impart a sense of the cinema's significance as the only new art form since the invention of printing. I try to provide a background of historical and critical facts in order to assist the film-viewer in establishing his own criteria for judging films. By exploring the history and the motivations of the creators of the cinema, Cinemages and other sources may eventually enlarge the audience for a mature screen product." (For subscription information, write to Bachmann at 3951 Gouverneur Avenue, New York 63, or call LO 2-6848.)

Because this is a column on FM, it would be better to leave an examination of Bachmann's highly interesting and informed views on films to Jonas Mekas. One opinion—on experimental film-makers who have gone to Hollywood—is so applicable to broadcasting and other fields that it bears repeating here. Bachmann mentioned a half-dozen directors, famed for their early efforts in film art. Most went to California knowing they would have to scrap their ideas to produce the kind of film the Hollywood moguls wanted. Some vowed they'd make enough money to produce a few "good" films of their own. Few did, according to Bachmann. "Film is an art form. In other fields and in other times, artists have been forced to work at related jobs to make a living while working at their art in spare moments. In other fields—painting, writing, etc.—this is still being done. Only in films are men swallowed up by their pot-boilers."

pressiveness of the human body as a beautiful instrument is minimal, and as a result most demands are made on the face, the chest, and the hands as a source of emotion. This restriction of emphasis makes for a restriction of movement which can be unsatisfying for an audience.

Battle of Washington Square

the Jack proposal. The hearing, with TV cameras in attendance, proved a big step forward for the "anti-traffic" forces. It brought the Washington Square story to the public at large.

Only a small minority of those who testified spoke in favor of a road through the park. In general, they were representatives of New York University, Washington Square Village, and the local Chamber of Commerce.

Jack Plan Disguised

The stellar cast did not, how-ever, win over the City Planning Commission, which handed down on July 16 a compromise decision. They agreed to a 36-foot cut through the park, but with only two lanes of traffic, which would be divided by a 12-foot mall. The mall was immediately attacked by the "anti-traffic" group as a stand-in for a potential third lane, which was just what Mr. Jack wanted.

The JEC realized at that point that their plans were perilously close to disaster. The next stop—the Board of Estimate—was the last one. And to make matters worse, the members of the Board could be expected to defer to the wishes of their fellow-member, Hulan Jack, on an issue that concerned his own borough.

Paging DeSapio

It was at this point that the cry-for-action by Mr. DeSapio took on urgency. He had not been heard from since the previous December.

On the DeSapio score, two fac-tors operated in favor of the "anti-traffic" group. There was an elec-tion coming up and Mr. DeSapio's old enemies, the Village Inde-pendent Democrats, were show-ing no sign of disappearing from the scene. As a matter of fact they had performed yeoman ser-vice in helping to gather 30,000 signatures on petitions.

Trouble, Maybe?

Mr. Rubinow warned the Tam-many Chief in a letter of July 31 that Assemblyman William F. Pas-sannante's bid for re-election might be "seriously jeopardized" if favorable action were not taken on the "Square" issue.

After an initial period of si-lence the drumfire of pressure proved effective. The Board of Estimate pushed the issue to the top of its calendar, and Mr. De-Sapio agreed to speak personally at the hearing, set for September 18.

Big Turnout

The hearing turned out to be even more predominantly weighed on the side of the "anti-traffic" group than the one before the planning commission. Mr. De-Sapio, asking that the Square be closed to traffic, made an im-passioned plea for human values. He was followed by all the local candidates, Democrats and Repub-licans, who expressed similar views.

The affair was highly effective, but the decision was yet to come. Mr. Rubinow kept insisting that it be made in-good-time before the election.

The weeks passed and nothing happened. It was at this juncture that some of the JEC members began to talk "political reprisal." Assemblyman Passannante, the candidate closest to Mr. DeSapio, was pinpointed for the reprisal.

The view of the "anti-traffic" group was that a "deal" had been made to put a roadway through the park, and that political coun-ter-pressure was the one effective way to upset the arrangement. Mr. Sapio was the natural choice as counter-weight, being both a Villager and the top Democratic politician.

Temporary or Permanent?

Whatever happened behind the scenes the result was that on Oc-tober 23 the Board of Estimate, at the suggestion of Borough President Jack, instituted a tem-porary closing of the Square to determine whether it is feasible to take it off the traffic-map, once and for all.

The victory has been a con-siderable one, but Mrs. Hayes warns it will not be complete until the present traffic lanes are transferred officially to the Park Department and the buses are taken out of the Square.

Folk-singer Leon Bibb and flamenco guitarist Juan Sastre will be performing every night through January 4 at the Village Gate, Thompson Street near Bleecker. On New Year's Eve the Clarence Williams trio will add to the festivities at the Gate.

by Bill Manville

SOME passionately anonymous reader of this column (probably some dear old lady) must be worried about my wasted life, because not too long ago I got a couple of tickets to the Opera in the mail, no name. So I went and—don't stop reading, this isn't going to be about the singing, you know.

First of all, when we got there we cruised the Scene. The only other place I've run into people like that was once at a farewell party I crashed when I sneaked into First Class while seeing some of my (third class) friends off on the Queen Mary. Is there a secret tunnel that connects the Met and the Grand Ballroom of the Queen Mary?

This got to be a little enervating (the glints, the glints coming off the wrong side of lorgnettes!), and we made it upstairs to Sherry's—all scarlet walls and rugs, a gorgeous saloon. A lot of movie stars and dukes were in there, having dinner (something comparable in chic, I suppose, to the people who get their mail sent to them in care of the Monte Carlo Casino, Monaco). We ourselves immediately ordered a brace of bourbons and sat around like we had never done anything else.

Pretty soon, ushers began banging on chimes, and the people got up to go into the auditorium. But as I look around, I see some cats just sitting still, and the millionaire and his diamond-bearer eating at the next table, they're calmly asking the waiter for a desert menu.

So I'm hip right away, and we cool the first act, just sitting there in Sherry's, ordering up a storm of bourbon. When the others are gone, those of us left in there, we don't do anything vulgar like shoot each other congratulatory looks, but we are all aware of each other, and we understand.

Next, the first act is over, and the people come rushing back in (opera must be thirsty work). When the room is full, a guy gets up at a table near the middle of the floor and begins studying the people like he's all alone studying wallpaper. He's got a piece of paper in his hand, and every once in a while he nods and writes a name down. It was Leonard Lyons, another saloon editor you may have heard of, so I figured, why not, and after ordering another tureen or two of bourbon, I get up, and taking out a pencil and an old subpoena, I begin to look around the room, too, very cool.

But the only name I know in the place is mine, the girl's, and Leonard Lyons'; so I wrote his name down, and now you know he was there, too (my first exclusive!). (I hope it satisfies those critics who keep asking me to put more names in the column.)

Anyway, pretty soon the chimes again, second act, and this time everyone cuts out. But you know, some people follow the fashion, some set it. So I said: "Let's just us stay," and so we did, and we had a lot more to drink, sitting there all alone in that enchanted red-and-gold saloon, acres of mirrors like the ones Marie Antoinette danced in front of, the ceilings gold and dreamy, far away, the bored waiters standing around gossiping and occasionally flicking an ash off a spotless tablecloth. And in the quiet from down the hall, a long way off, someone singing.

(My notes suddenly get blurred here, so I'll quit. If that little old lady sends me any more opera tickets, will she also send along a ball-point pen that writes under bourbon?)

the arts of champagne and brandy—all are presented for the appreciation of the palate.

When venturing to suggest that the Chateau Mouton really should be moved up with the wines of le Premier Cru; when damning the idiots who serve brandy in "footed aquariums"; or when noting that one of the reasons for the great cost of good brandy is that 10 bottles of white wine must be burnt (distilled) to produce one bottle of brandy, M. Simon is at his epicurean best. However, when M. Simon becomes a geographer and a statistician charting the exact boundary demarcations of the various wine regions and listing the number of tonneaux produced in each district, some of the magic vanishes.

There is no need to list the author's qualifications to write about wine, but if there were any doubt, the reader is referred to M. Simon's modest aside that, when gifted on his Golden Wedding in 1950 with a bottle of Chateau Lafite 1869, M. Simon set it aside to rest for four additional years before drinking.

The book is of course accompanied by vintage charts and maps of the various wine regions. But M. Simon has written many times on wine, and so there must be a special reason for this book and for its price of $15. I suggest it is the color photographs by Mr. Hennell. His full-page pictures of the grapes and wines accurately and invitingly reproduce their exquisite colors. From the deep dark blue of the Merlot and the lighter blue of the Gamay to the greenish white of the Semillon and the Aligote; from the brilliant red of a young wine to the dignified brick red of an old, fine Bordeaux, the colors dazzle the reader and raise an unquenchable thirst.

Vive M. Simon, vive le vin, vive la vie; c'est la meme chose!
